There are several different types of private schools, and picking the best one for your child can be a daunting task. Here is a brief description of a few prominent varieties of schools to choose from.

Montessori School: A school that utilizes Montessori education, a style of teaching that allows students more independence and the freedom to make decisions (within limits) on how they wish to approach the curriculum. Classes tend to be comprised of mixed age groups and utilize the “discovery” model of learning, in which students learn through hands-on work, rather than direct instruction.

Primrose School: An accredited family of pre-schools combining traditional education by a teacher with child-initiated play. Music, arts, gardening, foreign languages, character development, and more are emphasized as part of the curriculum. Visit primroseschools.com for more information.

Waldorf School: A school that utilizes a holistic, humanistic approach to learning, focusing on intellectual, practical, artistic, and spiritual pursuits. Classes remain together throughout their years, creating deep social connections between students.
